The National Human Rights Commission on Tuesday urged the government to ensure that the rights of the migrant population are protected. The call came in the wake of the National Human Rights Commission's September 4 report, which among other things, charged that migrant labourers are treated as "abhuman" and as if they are not human. "Migrant labourers are treated as if they are of lesser status, and are not citizens or even the basis for citizenship. When the NHRC gave the Centre and state governments one month to take steps for protection of their rights, these lapses were further emphasised," NHRC chairman Justice Madan B Lokur said. He was delivering the concluding address at the 31st Law Commission meeting here. "The migrant labourers are treated worse than slave labour," Justice Lokur said, and added that the Commission had observed that many migrant labourers are not given the minimum wage, health and safety protection. He also pointed out that the Commission had observed that the governments “are not providing enough security to them for their safe return” to their native states. “It is really a tragedy,” he said. In its report, the NHRC had recommended that the government should undertake a comprehensive study of the impact of its economic policies on the rights of the migrant workers. The Commission also recommended that the government should provide better security to migrant labourers. The Commission had recommended that the government should undertake a comprehensive study of the impact of its economic policies on the rights of migrant workers. It also recommended that the government should provide better security to migrant labourers. The Commission said: “After taking into account the financial and non-financial impact of their engagement in the domestic economy, and the consequences for their well-being and the lack of protection against exploitation, migrant workers have a right to work and life under the rights guaranteed by the Constitution.”COVID-19 The stress of the COVID-19 pandemic and the challenges it poses for our industry has been severe.
